Dear Hiring Manager,

I am applying for the Demand Generation Lead role at Origin (remote US and Canada; posted compensation $115k to $170k). I live in Edmonton and work well asynchronously. At Lumin Marketing Group I own acquisition-minded digital delivery for 2 active SMB client accounts: Google Ads and Meta campaigns, landing-page and website updates, CRM follow-up automations, and reporting that ends in clear next tests. Your emphasis on paid acquisition plus AI to speed campaign work matches how I already operate with Claude and Claude Code, always with human review before publish.

How I would support Origin demand generation:

- Own hands-on Google Ads (and Meta) experiments: structure, creative tests, budget monitoring, and weekly notes tied to CPA / conversion signals
- Tighten landing pages and messaging so paid traffic has a cleaner path to qualified interest; ship WordPress / web updates quickly
- Use CRM / automation patterns (Go High Level today; ready to deepen HubSpot / Clay) to keep follow-ups and handoffs organized
- Apply Claude and Claude Code to speed research, briefs, QA checklists, and reporting drafts, then review before anything reaches market

I am honest that LinkedIn Ads depth, Reddit Ads, cybersecurity / B2B SaaS pipeline tenure, and Clay-native RevOps stacks are still growing versus Origin's bench; my current book is two SMB accounts, not an enterprise security pipeline. What transfers is paid acquisition ownership, experimentation discipline, AI-assisted ops that save about 20 hours per week, and reliable remote delivery. Resume attached. Happy to walk through a 30-day demand experiment plan for one ICP segment.

Best regards,

Dylan Michael
